General Comments

Licensing staff conducted a monitoring visit.
Upon arrival, the children in the older preschool room were eating snack from their lunchboxes, while the two-year-old group was washing their hands in preparation for snack. The infant group was already outdoors. As children in the older preschool room finished eating, they got ready and accompanied an educator outside.
The infant outdoor play area is separate from the rest of the playground. Children were observed engaging in various activities, including playing in the sandboxes, exploring the wooden play structures, and using balls and other available materials.
The preschool group was engaged in outdoor play, using plasma cars and dancing to music. Craft materials were available outside as well. Educators were actively engaged with the children by running and playing alongside them, asking questions about artwork they had created, and interacting with them throughout the outdoor play period.
The infant group then participated in a cleanup routine with the support of educators, accompanied by a cleanup song. Once the area was tidied, the children lined up and transitioned indoors. Inside, they participated in a painting activity.
The two-year-old group then transitioned outdoors to enjoy the outdoor play area.
Prior to lunch, the infant group participated in a designated circle time. Children sang songs together, including Christmas songs and songs that encouraged them to learn and recognize one another's names.
Diaper-changing routines were observed throughout the visit. The groups then transitioned to lunch, where children ate at the tables under educator supervision.
Documented learning stories were observed throughout the facility, demonstrating the documentation of children's learning and development.
Only positive child guidance practices were observed throughout the visit. Required staff-to-child ratios were maintained at all times. The indoor and outdoor environments were observed to contain a sufficient variety of materials to support children's play and engagement.
