General Comments

When QAM arrived in the morning, it was a Professional Development (PD) day for local schools. Children were observed participating in a variety of activities, including constructing cardboard gingerbread houses, creating collages, and engaging with a sand sensory invitation that included trucks and cars.

A separate group of children was observed watching a Christmas movie as a planned activity for the PD day. Educators reported that children have demonstrated a strong interest in craft-related activities.

The learning environment was clean, organized, and equipped with an adequate quantity of materials and resources to support children's learning and play.

A review of documentation confirmed that staff-to-child ratios were maintained, the parent information board was current, fire drill records were up to date, and staff files were complete and current.
