General Comments

A renewal inspection was conducted today, during which children were observed in both their indoor and outdoor environments. Educators were seen assisting children with opening snacks brought from home, supporting them with water bottles at their level, and promoting proper handwashing, which was observed multiple times throughout the visit. In the twos room, children's belongings were neatly labeled and accessible, and educators had several invitations to play displayed, including a "nose-blowing routine" with a mirror and tissues reflecting current interests, as well as documentation of a recent goat visit that children eagerly shared. In the infant room, children's interests in music and dancing were highlighted through displayed photos, and educators showcased open-ended art projects such as painted trees. Preschool children were engaged in a literacy-based gross motor activity involving jumping on letters and forming words, with one child responding "Denmark" when asked what could be spelled with the letter D. The afterschool room featured a basketball net, a cozy corner with a rug and wicker chairs, a kitchen set with play food, decorative lights, accessible playdough, and materials supporting emotional literacy. Outdoors, children had access to ride-on toys, balls, digging toys, shovels, and other age-appropriate materials. The parent board was complete with previous inspection reports and inspector contact information. Fire drill records were up to date, incident logs were complete, and staff files along with a random review of 20 children's files were examined and found to be in order.
