General Comments QAM observed the morning drop-off and the transition indoors. All children began their day outside until all or most had arrived. Children were engaged in various outdoor activities, including using the mud kitchen, playing in puddles, using the see-saw, and jumping on tires. Educators set a two-minute timer to prepare children for the transition indoors, which the children responded to positively. During the transition, children independently removed their outdoor clothing, put on their indoor shoes, and lined up to wash their hands before entering the learning environment. Inside, the learning environment offered several invitations, including forts, a castle setup, LEGO activities, and an art area. The parent board and fire drill records were accurate and up to date.
