General Comments
In the Exp Room, the educator had an art invitation set out. Other children were engaged in activities around the room. I observed a Lego table, a dollhouse with barbies and an interactive globe. Some children were also playing with baby dolls and reading in a cozy corner. Books have been added to the window ledge to make this an inviting area. There was a shelf with loose parts and a bulletin board ready for new art creations. The educator was patient and clearly explained the steps of the art project to the children. In the Jones Room children were also engaged in a variety of activities. I observed children playing with playdough, building with lego and other blocks, and colouring. Both educators showed a genuine interest in what the children were telling them. There is a large bulletin board that has different pieces of art that the children have created. There are lots of new, interesting books for the children to read. Both rooms have been freshly painted and have new art added to the walls. Ratios were maintained at all times during the inspections.
