General Comments

Operator was waiting outside for children to arrive on the bus when licensing staff arrived. The operator met the children coming off the bus. Children headed to the space once inside and washed their hands in preparation for snack. A healthy snack was offered to the children while the operator asked children about their day.

A puzzle was set up on a table and the children have been working away at it on and off for the past several weeks. This is evidence of the operator's respect for the sustainability of children's play and engagement. The children have completed several puzzles over the year working away at them over time. The educator values the completed puzzles by gluing them and posting on the wall for the children to view them. The puzzle was finished today, and the operator documented the last piece placed by the child with a photo. Photos of some of the completed puzzles with children were posted documenting their persistence and smiling faces indicating joy of completion.

The operator has a positive and respectful repertoire with children. The environment supports children's independence and agency. There is a large selection of board games, puzzles, mark-making materials, craft materials, and imaginative play elements. Some of the children are interested in brain games and the operator has a selection representing different interests, seasons, and holidays.
