General Comments During the morning visit, the QAM observed a well-prepared and developmentally appropriate learning environment. Invitations to play were set up throughout the room, including playdough, kinetic sand, and an Easter-themed egg and coloring activity. Children were engaged in a variety of experiences such as grocery store dramatic play, exploring the invitations, and using the instrument area. The indoor environment was clean, organized, and well-stocked with materials to support dramatic play, music, literacy, art, and general exploration. Each child had a documentation binder, indicating ongoing assessment and record-keeping. The educator remained consistently engaged with the children and demonstrated active supervision and positive interaction. The outdoor play space included trucks, playhouses, a music wall, a dramatic play kitchen, and a swing. These materials supported both gross-motor development and imaginative play. School-age children had access to a basketball net, darts, board games, and the same high-quality materials available to preschool children, providing continuity and variety in programming. The parent board, child-to-educator ratio, and fire drill records were reviewed and found to be accurate, current, and compliant with requirements.
