General Comments During the QAM observation, all classrooms contained appropriate documentation and sufficient materials to support children's learning in the areas of art, literacy, blocks, dramatic play, manipulatives, and fine and gross motor development. All learning environments were clean, organized, and well-maintained. A common interest in insects was evident throughout the centre. Documentation related to children's learning and exploration of insects was visible in each classroom. Educators supported this interest through a variety of learning experiences, including insect-themed counting activities and outdoor investigations where children searched for insects in the natural environment. Staff demonstrated positive interactions with children and consistently used child-positive guidance strategies across all learning environments observed. A review of administrative requirements indicated that child-to-staff ratios were maintained, parent information boards were current, staff files were complete and up to date, and fire drill records were accurately maintained.
