General Comments

When licensing staff arrived, children had just finished watching a movie and were moving to play throughout the room. Resources are accessible throughout the room to children and children are independent in their play and selections. A bookshelf was located beside the corner reading area with a selection of picture, chapter and information books. Children were observed gathering writing materials, paper and instructional drawing books from the art area to create drawings. A selection of board and card games along with puzzles were available. Children were engaged in play in one area playing with dolls and another group were building and playing with dinosaurs and action heroes.

One educator quietly stated, "If you can hear me, touch your" and children quickly responded. The educator then reminded it was time to clean up and get ready for swimming. Children cleaned up and went to get their swim wear and wait in a line for everyone to be ready. While waiting, an educator began a game of I spy with the children with them raising their hands to respond. Before leaving the classroom, educators counted the children to ensure everyone was present and reminded children of the rules of the changing room.

Both rooms on this license have swim time at the same time and one group was waiting for the second group in the pool area waiting area. When all children were present, one of the lifeguards asked the children if they remembered each of the rules by asking questions. Children that have passed their swim test have the option to go in the deep end and receive a bracelet to identify this. There were a total of seven educators, and two lifeguards present for 32 children so the pool staff to child ratio was more than met.

Child files were reviewed and consents for some children are kept online. They have created a new system that will be more user friendly to keep all files with access provided to licensing staff when requested.
