General Comments

A monitoring inspection was conducted for both the infant and preschool programs during the morning.

Infants and preschool children were observed participating in a variety of planned and spontaneous indoor learning experiences. Planned activities included a car wash sensory experience using soap, water, and toothbrushes; an alphabet hunt where children and educators used alphabet sheets to search for letters throughout the room; an emotions coloring activity where infants explored different emotions illustrated on a large sheet of paper placed on the floor; gem painting, where children used paintbrushes to move gems through paint across paper; and a tooth-brushing activity using laminated teeth, dry-erase markers, and toothbrushes to support discussions about oral hygiene.

The learning environments were arranged with a variety of open-ended materials that supported children's play, exploration, and learning. Materials were stored on low, open shelves, making them easily accessible and promoting independent choice. Documentation was current and reflected the children's recent interests and experiences. Photographs of the children and samples of their artwork were displayed throughout the learning environments.

The following records were reviewed: daily attendance records, infant and toddler daily sheets, a sample of children's files, and all new staff files.
