General Comments

On the afternoon of the monitoring visit, children were engaged in both indoor and outdoor play.

Upon arrival, the children were participating in their group huddle with the educators. The question, "If you could be any fruit, what would you want to be?" was posed to the group.

The children all washed their hands before snack and the educators wiped the tables down. Snack was crackers, cheese strings, and carrots.

While children finished up snack, educators added extra materials to the gym. They brought in a mini kitchen set, lego, and beyblades. Children also had access to coloring supplies and board games.

The routine was on the white board and due to the rain stopping, the educators were flexible and changed the afternoon activities from gym games and a craft to going outside.

On the playground, children had access to balls, skipping ropes, and different colored scarves for dramatic play.

The educators on-site not only met ratio requirements, but extra educators were also present. This allowed for the children to break into smaller groups and for educators to provide strong supervision in the gym, washrooms, and hallways. When children needed extra support, one on one time was available with an educator since the center was under ratio.

Child and staff files were checked. They were organized and easy to verify.
