General Comments
When the QAM arrived in the morning, she observed Rooms 6, 5, and 4 returning indoors from outdoor play. Due to the rainy weather, some children appeared upset upon returning inside. Educators supported the transition by assisting children with removing their outdoor clothing and organizing them into smaller groups as needed. Educators responded to children's emotions by providing comfort, reassurance, and support throughout the transition. Documentation reflecting children's learning and experiences was displayed throughout all observed learning environments. Invitations for play included animal-themed materials, blocks, and sensory experiences. In Room 2, children were engaged in an autumn-themed colouring activity while listening to music. The educator was actively engaged with the children and supported their participation in the activity. In Room 1, children were exploring sensory bottles, bubbles, and a sensory table containing leaves and other fall-related natural materials. Educators remained at the children's level, providing supervision, support, and responsive interactions throughout the observation. Educators shared that the children's current interests include outdoor play, mark-making, and risky play. The parent information board, child-to-staff ratios, and incident reports were reviewed and found to be accurate, complete, and up to date.
