General Comments

Licensing staff conducted the annual renewal inspection.

Upon arrival, the two-year-old group was cleaning up following snack time. An educator asked the children whether they would prefer to paint or go outside, and the group chose to go outdoors. Children prepared for outdoor play with the assistance of educators, who encouraged independence throughout the routine.
All groups under the license transitioned outdoors. The infants were dressed appropriately for the weather and engaged in outdoor play. They explored sand and mud in the play kitchen, while educators provided a sand table and opportunities to play with toy lawn mowers and trucks. Educators were actively engaged with the infants, assisting the younger children with walking and encouraging movement through the play area.

The two and three-year-old groups used their designated outdoor play areas. The outdoor environment offered a variety of play opportunities, including a large wooden pirate ship, tire swings, sheds for dramatic play, sandboxes, balls, trucks, and large wooden blocks. Children showed particular interest in the wooden blocks, using them to build, create, and explore different ways to play. Educators were observed pushing children on the tire swings, throwing balls with them, and participating in imaginative play, including acting out an ice cream drive-through. Educators also responded to children's needs, including assisting those who needed to use the washroom. Positive child guidance and redirection were consistently observed. First aid kits and attendance sheets were available in the outdoor areas.

Following outdoor play and singing songs such as "Hop Little Bunnies," the infant groups transitioned indoors for lunch. The youngest infants were observed following diaper-changing procedures while another educator engaged the group through singing. The other infant group also completed diaper-changing routines before transitioning to the table for lunch.

The younger infants were seated in high chairs for their meals. The older infant group was provided with their lunches and utensils, with educators offering assistance as needed. Following lunch, cots were prepared for the older infant group, while playpens were set up for the youngest infants.

| The remaining groups also transitioned indoors for lunchtime. Bathroom routines were completed, and children washed their hands before eating. Educators heated children's lunches as needed. Following lunch, cots were prepared for children transitioning to nap time, while quiet-time arrangements were made for those who did not sleep. Ratio was met at all times.Staff and child files were verified. Required professional learning hours were met for the applicable employees. Curriculum documentation and learning stories were displayed throughout the classrooms and hallways.Licensing staff advised the administrator to continue monitoring the plastic play structure in the outdoor infant play area, which currently has a crack and has been secured with tape. Licensing staff also recommended that the sandboxes in the infant outdoor play area be replenished.Licensing staff recommends the program for renewal. |
