General Comments

The children and operator were getting ready for a walk to the park when I arrived. As the operator left the home the children walked to end the end of the driveway, the children looked both ways for traffic before crossing road. As they walked through the trails the some of the children would get ahead and would stop to wait at certain points on the trail for the others to catch up. Once they arrived at the park the children had some free play time on the play structures while the operator unloaded the wagon that was full of materials and prepared an invitation on the picnic table. The children were asked to find rocks for the invitation activity of washing and painting the rocks. The operator had brought a variety of materials to use at the park including brushes of various size, small pots, bowls, tea pots, chalk, trucks, shovels and a bowling set. As the children washed and painted the rocks; The water, rocks, and other materials became potions and soups. As the activity ended some of the children marked on the pavement with chalk, dug for worms in the dirt or played on the play structures. At one time the play structure became a ship what one of the children was driving. During the visit the operator was observed asking the children a variety of questions to create conversation. Due to the warm day the children had a picnic lunch at the park. A blanket was laid on the ground for the children to sit on as they ate their lunch. As the children at the operator read a story called " Where the Wild Things are" by Maurice Sendak. After lunch the children had some free play time. Then it was time to clean up and head back to the home centre for nap and quiet time.
