General Comments

When I arrived, the children were all sitting in the quiet area and the educator was speaking to them. She advised them it was "free choice day". The children then separated and picked a station/activity they wanted to do. Some were coloring others were reading books in the quiet area, some were playing with the pretend kitchen and doll house.

Educators were engaged with the children throughout the inspection. One was observed sitting on the floor reading a child a book. The other educators were walking around or sitting with the children and talking with them or engaged in play with them.

The play area is set up in stations and the children have different materials and toys, Legos, games, puzzles, books, arts and craft supplies, a playhouse and a play kitchen, different blocks, and loose parts. A child scrapped their knee, and the educator was quick to respond and applied first aid.

At snack time, the children were asked to wash their hands before eating.

There are two boards at the entrance where parents come in with pictures of the children engaged in play and activities throughout the year. The educator advised the photo boards are updated.

Positive child guidance practices were heard such as gentle reminders and providing encouraging words.

Staff files and children files were inspected and were found to be in compliance with Licensing Regulations.

All required information that is required to be posted to the parent/guardian board, as outlined in Licensing Regulations, were posted.

I recommend for renewal.
