General Comments

Upon the arrival of licensing staff for the renewal inspection of Go-Go After School Connaught Street, children were observed waiting in line outside Connaught Street School with the educators. A head count was performed, and once all children had arrived, the group made their way to the church gym down the street. Upon entering, the children changed their shoes, used the washroom as needed, and were met with positive words of encouragement from the educators. As each child finished, they gathered and sat in a circle.

An educator engaged the group in a word-animal association game on the whiteboard while waiting for everyone to finish. Once all the children were settled, the educators invited them to choose between free play or having a snack. The activities observed included building with Lego, drawing and making crafts at the table, playing in the dramatic play area, reading books, playing with cards the children had invented of their own and using the whiteboard.

Later in the afternoon, half of the group chose to participate in a game of Simon Says before preparing to go outside to collect natural materials for a craft activity. Each child had their own bag and gathered items such as flowers, leaves, branches, weeds, and tree bark. The group then returned indoors and rejoined the other children, who had continued to engage in free play. The collected materials were then used to create crafts, with the children gluing the items onto pieces of paper to form nature-themed scenes.

A board displayed the required parent board information, and staff and child files were found to follow regulations. Positive child guidance was observed throughout the inspection.

Licensing staff recommends for renewal.
