General Comments During a discussion with educators about the summer program, QAM observed that all groups were returning from a tie-dye shirt activity, which was identified as an end-of-summer experience. Educators shared that the children participated in a variety of outings and activities throughout the summer, including swimming, visits to playgrounds and splash pads, biking days, and science experiments. QAM observed that all learning environments were clean, organized, and well supplied with a significant amount of materials and resources accessible to support children's learning and play. QAM also reviewed fire drill records, staff files, and parent information boards. All documentation was current, complete, and up to date.
