General Comments

Children were watching a short video this morning on service dogs, then they each had an opportunity to draw and write in their journals about a possible service animal. The older children sat with the younger children talking about what they were thinking about and writing the names of the animals on their pages, if requested. Tables were cleaned and children were encouraged to wash their hands and grab their snacks. Educators moved around the room supporting children and having discussions during snack. Afterwards, children sat on the floor and read books as a painting activity was set up. The group went apple picking yesterday so they were provided with paint, paper and tree trunks to create their own apple trees while the school-age children continued experimenting with watercolors. As children finished up, they washed up and joined everyone on the floor again with a book for everyone to finish.

The group then got ready to go outside for a short walk and then play in the outdoor space. Children enjoyed exploring fallen trees and playing in the sand and water when they returned.

The school age children participate in the care of the environment and supporting the younger children.
