General Comments

When licensing staff arrived, children were sitting on the couch having Mr. Freezes talking with one another. Children asked the operator afterwards if they could choose and print off coloring sheets of favorite characters or images. Children took turns choosing an image with the operator's guidance and then independently gathering writing and coloring materials. The children showed licensing staff the repurposed cabinet filled with materials for creating such as jars of beads, buttons, and glitter, playdough, scissors, glue, writing utensils, and coloring utensils. The operator had a variety of tape available so children could tape their colored sheets afterwards or laminate with laminating sheets.

Two children moved on from coloring to the loft area to play with the dolls and materials available. When parents came for pickup, children were provided extra time to complete what they were doing.

The operator and licensing staff discussed pre-planning curriculum, and the operator produced a weekly calendar stating that she follows the children's lead if they choose something else each day. A recommendation was made to possibly create a web each week with the children building on their interests and passions and extending it with invitations and provocations. The operator can create the web on a whiteboard or piece of paper and add items throughout the week. Documentation of this on-going planning can be captured by a photo representing the multiple ideas and learning occurring throughout the year.

The operator's kindness towards the children was observed and asking open-ended questions when children appeared upset.
