General Comments
When QAM entered the Front Room, a child was observed crying and expressing that he wanted his mother. The child had been away during the break and appeared to be experiencing difficulty transitioning back into the learning environment. Educators responded with positive guidance by checking in with him, acknowledging his feelings, and reassuring him that they were available when he felt ready to talk or join the group. Documentation in both rooms reflected recent learning experiences, including neighbourhood walks, exploring snowflakes, conducting science experiments, learning about hibernation, participating in spa-themed play, and engaging in photoshoots. Educators reported that the children have shown strong interest in art activities, dancing, and gross motor play.
