General Comments
Monitoring inspection completed today. Children were in the indoor play area and preparing for outdoor play. Preschool children and infants were engaged in free play throughout their indoor play environment before preparing for outdoor play. Outdoors, children were enjoying sand play, sliding, and demonstrating to Quality Assurance Monitor how far they could jump! Documentation posted in the indoor learning environments demonstrates children's current interests and learning. Additional mulch needed at base of slides. It was observed during inspection that transitions for preschool children were difficult with a long wait time as children washed their hands after returning from outdoor play. Planning for transitions can support children's movement from indoors to outdoors or between activities. Singing songs, playing games, or reading books, can ensure that children do not get bored while waiting. As mentioned by QA Monitor, for children who may require additional support you can reach out to the Early learning Consultant for the Inclusion support program.
