General Comments

Upon arrival of licensing staff, most children were engaged in a game of number BINGO at the table while another child was reading. After the game was finished the educator reflected with the children that they had played this game in the past and had not been able to finish the game, she acknowledged that the children were all much more engaged with numbers now and recognizing them independently.

The children were engaged in several activities throughout the inspection, playdough, puzzles, reading and open-ended activities were all observed. The educators provided support where needed and asked the children engaging questions to expand on their knowledge and play based experiences.

Documentation of learning was visible through white board messages. The learning documented was child led and showed examples of this such as children asking if they had a princess card game, and when they did not, they created their own.

Intentional child lead learning was also displayed on a clipboard which had lists of What we know ...
and What we Learned...

Staff files were well maintained and contained all required documentation.

Positive behaviour guidance was observed at all times.
