General Comments

Room 4

The QAM asked educators how they are managing the larger group sizes within their learning environment. Educators shared that transitions can be challenging at times; however, they have implemented a strategy of dividing children into groups of five and transitioning each group separately. Educators also noted that communication with families can occasionally be difficult due to the larger group sizes and the frequent movement of educators between rooms throughout the week.

Children were observed outside eating lunch during the visit. The indoor learning environment was clean, organized, and provided multiple learning invitations. Documentation of children's learning was displayed throughout the room.

Room 5

When the QAM asked educators about managing the larger group sizes, they explained that overall they are managing well by dividing children into smaller groups during transitions. Educators shared that walks can sometimes be challenging; however, they use a strategy of pairing older children with younger children to support safe and successful transitions while walking.

The learning environment offered a variety of materials and supplies to support literacy, building, sensory, and dramatic play experiences. Multiple learning invitations were observed throughout the room.
