General Comments

Room 1

Conversations with educators and a review of documentation binders show that children are participating in a variety of activities, including science experiments, sensory play with cooking ingredients, animal exploration, color-matching puzzles, painting, and action songs.

Educators reported that transitions can feel busy with the larger group of children; however, they support transitions by engaging children with songs and books.

Room 2

Documentation and educator feedback indicate that children are involved in risky play, outdoor exploration, ball play, learning choices, and color-focused activities.

Room 3

Educators and documentation binders reflect that children are engaging in color sorting, learning about food, various sensory activities, and exploring insects, animals, and nature.

Educators noted that transitions can be busy with the larger group, but they manage this effectively by dividing the children into two groups and using songs and books to maintain engagement.

Child-staff ratios were accurately recorded across all rooms, all incident reports were completed and signed with a review of reporting expectations to the QA monitor and staff files were verified for accuracy with new staff files updated accordingly.
