General Comments

Children were creating a poster with their handprints for Truth and Reconciliation Day when licensing staff arrived. Each child was invited to come to the table and have their hand painted orange by an educator to add to the poster which was put up on the white board when completed. One educator then joined children on the mat to read a book. The educator read with lots of expression and translated some expressions to French for a child in the room.

The children then played throughout the room with several in the play kitchen area with an educator and others at tables coloring and building with educators. One relief educator joined children on a mat to build with blocks. Some curriculum areas were limited for the number of children present and an educator stated that resources had been ordered to ensure there is variety and enough resources for the children. Art and writing materials had arrived the day before and would be added to the environment to ensure children had independent access. Play dough was offered to children during a transition without additional tools to create and play which can be added to when resources arrive. One child requested a wooden tool reminding the educator they had wooden popsicle sticks the day before with playdough.

The educator transitioned into lunch preparations by sitting on the mat to sing songs while each child slowly joined the educator and other children while lunches were prepared and set out for children. Children then lined up to wash their hands for lunch. Children were encouraged to open their lunch items and containers and received help when needed. One educator provided a verbal and visual explanation to a child on how to open a snack bag allowing the child to learn in multiple ways. Educators placed themselves at each table with children engaging in discussion.

Staff files were reviewed and complete for each staff present. An educator printed out staff files to create paper files for each staff with required documents. A reminder was given to post a new fire drill record for the school year and document the already completed fire drill with the whole school.
