The educators set a blanket down for the children to eat their afternoon snacks and draw if they chose to. A large Tetris game, sport equipment, drawing sheets, markers, and a large Tetris game was brought outside for the children to play with. While outside, the educators were in touch with the children's needs by encouraged the children to take water breaks and by supervising the children while taking washroom breaks. The children were supervised at all times, and the educators were heard asking the children to remain in the set school yard boundaries and conducted headcounts of the children often.

When some children fell and approached the educators, they offered to comfort the children by asking them if they were ok and hugging them.
