General Comments
Children were waking up from nap when licensing staff arrived. The infant educator was holding an infant offering comfort to support the transition from nap which only took a couple of minutes before the child was ready for snack. Preschool children were eating snack in each of their groups, using the washroom and washing hands before eating. The facility is decorated for fall and Halloween. Books in each room include texts related to seasonal events and sensory tables are set up with seasonal items showing evidence of the pre-planning of curriculum. Learning stories are posted in the entryway and one room with connections to the curriculum and photos and descriptions of children's play. Licensing staff encourages educators to post children's photos and names throughout each room at the child's level to build children's sense of belonging and connection to print literacy. After snack, children in each room played until all children were finished and clean-up occurred before going outside. Play dough offered in one room included lots of tools for creating and building. An educator in one room sat down with the children to play with the vehicles and several children used resources related to a salon to make-up the licensing staff. Children had multiple tools related to a salon which evolved into a hospital when one child brought over the medical supply basket and donned the coat, hat, and glasses for a doctor. As children played, their experiences and prior knowledge were evident in descriptions of vehicles, salon techniques, and medical tests. Educators in each room took children outside to play on the playground. All previous items of non-compliance have been corrected. Children enjoyed running throughout the space with peers and educators, with several children pretending to be zombies. The infants in their outdoor play space watched the older children play through the fence and sat at their small picnic table to get a drink. Ride-on vehicles and tonka trucks were available for play and children used the kitchen resources to cook in the play kitchen. Educators supported children testing their balancing and motor skills throughout the play space on logs and tires. New staff files were reviewed and items discussed with operator for follow-up.
