General Comments When QAM observed the learning environment, children were finishing their snacks. The room was clean and organized, with a variety of materials available to support dramatic play, literacy, building and construction, art, and sensory experiences. Educators shared with QAM that the children would be participating in a butterfly release with a guest speaker. Educators also shared that the children's current interests included messy play and that they were focusing on supporting newly enrolled children as they became familiar with the preschool routine. The outdoor play area included a variety of materials and equipment, such as ride-on cars, a sandbox, slides, tires, a mud kitchen, dolls, and a chalkboard. The outdoor play area was well maintained, and the materials and equipment observed were in good condition. QAM reviewed the parent board and fire drill documentation and observed the child-to-staff ratio. The parent board and fire drill documentation were current and up to date. The required child-to-staff ratio was maintained at the time of QAM's observation.
