General Comments Groups were participating in a number of different activities in their rooms. In the 2's room, children were playing in a water sensory tub using spoons and cups to pour, scoop, and stir. In the other 2's room, the educator set out trays with modelling clay, scissors and other wooden clay tools. Children pretended to make a birthday cake and practiced fine motor skills when cutting the clay. The third room of two-year-olds played with trucks and listened to a story read by their educator. Upstairs, the three-, four-, and five-year-olds were having a dance party while they waited for the outdoor temperature to warm up before they could go out to play. All rooms had a variety of materials and puzzles, books and loose parts are available for the children to choose from. Learning stories posted in the facility and the class dojo document children's learning and connections to the curriculum. Educators engaged with children on their level and were attentive to their needs. They showed patience and compassion when helping children share materials and use their words with their friends. Relief staff and administrators worked as a team with the educators and stepped in to help with diapering and transitions.
