General Comments

On the day of the monitoring visit, children were involved in a variety of activities. I observed children playing with trains and instruments, doing puzzles and painting.

The operator was very patient with the children and used a lot of encouragement and singing when transitioning the children from one activity to the next. She was down on the floor playing with the children and provided them with lots of opportunities for building vocabulary and problem solving. She asked lots of questions and used different situations to promote independence. For example, the children set out their own placemat for snack, unzipped their lunch bags and opened their containers and packages. When the children were done painting, they hung their own painting with the clothespin to strengthen fine motor skills.

The operator read a Dr. Seuss ABC Book during snack time and used silly expressions and children really enjoyed this.

I checked the bulletin boards and all required documentation is posted. The menu with substitutions was posted along with the monthly fire drill log, which are up to date.

The operator uses a number of ways to document the children's learning. She emails a daily message along with photos to the parents, has a slideshow playing in the room with photos, and has art and documentation posted in the room. In addition, each child has a special scrap book and these have a variety of learning stories that are very well done.

Child files were checked and all is in order and complete.
