General Comments

After all children arrived for morning preschool, the operator set out foam letters and paper. Children were invited to add whichever letters they wanted on their paper and the operator sat to help extend the activity to discuss letters in the children's names and the letters the sounds make. Children could leave the table when they were finished and could return back to continue if they wished.

The two whiteboards in the room have new webs started- Signs of Spring and The Arts. The operator has started adding onto the topics and interests that could stem from these topics.

The operator has an abundance of materials and shared that she regularly rotates materials in and out. Today the children enjoyed playing with a caterpillar game that was recently added to the space. The game had a fine motor component and the children used small plastic tongs to play the game.

The operator encourages independent skills and children put on their own shoes after drop-off, washed hands and hung up their own artwork on the art clothesline.

When it was time to clean up, the children began putting the scraps of paper into the ride on trucks pretending they were garbage trucks. The operator allowed flexibility with the clean-up routine and took interest in the children's imaginative play with the garbage trucks.

Ample storage is available for the children's personal belongings. Hooks are available for outdoor clothing and shelves for lunch bags and backpacks.

During snack time, the operator read a storybook that one of the children brought in. Children can bring books from home to share with the group.
