General Comments

A renewal inspection occurred today. In the upstairs learning environment, a fresh market was set up for the children to engage in pretend play, along with a dollhouse complete with accessories. Lunches were prepared and set out for when the children returned indoors. Educators facilitated a creative art activity where paper was placed under the table, allowing children to paint with markers while lying on the floor. This unique approach encouraged sensory engagement and gross motor involvement. Educators documented the experience through learning stories and photographs, showcasing the children's participation and creativity.
Downstairs, the environment featured custom-made, sturdy art easels where children explored watercolor painting. Egg-shaped chairs provided cozy seating, and open-ended artwork was displayed throughout the space, reflecting the children's ongoing interests. Water bottles were clearly labeled and accessible to promote hydration and independence. The facility had recently come out of a gastro outbreak, and due to lingering colds among the children, playdough use was limited until it could be safely reintroduced without risk of spreading germs. A sensory book with buckles, zippers, and ties engaged one child in fine motor exploration, while other children played with magnetic blocks, cars, and an old keyboard, encouraging imaginative and tactile experiences.
Evacuation procedures were clearly displayed by the doorways, and all fire safety checks were observed and complete. Children's and staff files were observed and complete. The facility demonstrated ,safe, engaging, and developmentally appropriate experiences for all children, with educators actively supporting learning through creative and sensory-rich activities.
