General Comments

During the afternoon observation of the Bentley room, children transitioned indoors from outdoor play and prepared for lunch by washing their hands, retrieving their lunch bags, and returning to their seats. Educators sat with the children and engaged them in developmentally appropriate conversations about colors and numbers to support learning during the mealtime routine. The room was clean, organized, and well-equipped with musical instruments, toys, blocks, dramatic play materials such as a kitchen set and dress-up clothes, a tool table, a tent, playdough, and a variety of literacy resources. The Afterschool space was also well-supplied, offering blocks, puzzles, dress-up items, chalk, and art materials to support creative and social play. All regulatory elements—including staff-to-child ratios, the parent information board, and staff files—were reviewed and found to be accurate, complete, and up to date, reflecting strong compliance and effective program management.
