General Comments
A renewal inspection was conducted during the afternoon for the school-age program. Upon arrival, half of the school-age children returned to the center, while the other group remained at the school playground to engage in outdoor play. The children who returned to the center were observed washing their hands upon arrival. Following handwashing, the children participated in snack time and then gathered for "Soul Time," during which an educator facilitated a discussion about kindness. As part of the discussion, the educator conducted an experiment using two eggs and two glasses of water, one containing salt and the other plain water. The children were invited to share unkind words, and the egg placed in the plain water sank to the bottom. The educator then encouraged the children to share kind words before placing the second egg into the salt water, where it floated. The educator used the experiment to demonstrate how kindness can lift others up, while unkind words can have a negative impact. The children were highly engaged throughout the activity, actively participating in the discussion and showing great interest in the outcome of the experiment. The indoor and outdoor environments contained a variety of open-ended materials available for children to use during play. Materials were organized in baskets and on shelves and were accessible to the children. Invitations were set up prior to the children arriving. Current documentation of children's activities was displayed within the classroom. Samples of their artwork were displayed throughout the indoor environment. The educators shared that it's Carnival week and that the children have been having lots of fun engaging in planned activities. The following records were reviewed: incident logs, fire drill records, daily attendance records, a sample of children's files, and all staff files. The following was discussed with the on-site administrator: 1. Ensuring volunteer files are complete and contain all required records. 2. Developing a daily schedule for full-day programming to support the organization of the day. The facility is recommended for licensing.
