General Comments

Monitoring report performed. No compliances to address during this inspection visit. Administrative records were reviewed and also new staff information.

All children were enjoying a quiet time and listening to soothing music this afternoon and playing a variety of age-appropriate activities alone or in small groups. All children were playing cooperatively. Some children were observed coloring, making things with slime, coloring pictures for the Diwali festival, playing with magnetic blocks, playing in the kitchen centre using pots and pretending to make strawberry pie while using other loose parts that children could find to prepare the dish.

One educator mentioned that the children are learning about Diwali, a Hindu religious festival of lights that will be celebrated on November 12th. This would be a wonderful opportunity to invite someone from the community to talk about the festival or for the educator to talk about and document facts about this celebration in language that would be easily understood by children - how long it lasts, what foods are eaten etc. Find pictures and post with the facts about the festival.

Educators were heard speaking to the children kindly and said "good job, thank you for telling me, that's okay, you are getting so good at dressing your babies etc.

I would recommend once quiet hour is over that you open the drapes and let in the light.

The educators have an individual communication book they use for children that educators record observations about the child's day. I would recommend that you have a line for the parent to initial which acknowledges they have read. I would recommend leaving a few lines to allow a parent to respond also to give feedback.
