General Comments

During the QAM visit, children were engaged in a variety of activities both indoors and outdoors. Outside, some children were playing mini hockey while others were digging a large hole in the snow. The child-to-staff ratio was appropriate and met required standards. Indoors, children were playing with Pokémon cards and drawing, with educators actively participating in the Pokémon activity. The learning environment was clean, well-organized, and equipped with a wide range of materials to support dramatic play, literacy, art, and building. The parent board was accurate, current, and clearly displayed.
