General Comments

On the afternoon of the monitoring inspection, children were divided into two groups. One group was in the gym playing "Get Active Handball." The operator explained to licensing staff that it is a game with a focus on physical literacy. Because the children do not run with the ball, they learn concepts such as passing, calling out to team members, and opening to pass the ball. This game is played often in the fall to help the children with building the skills to play basketball, hockey and soccer later in the year.

The other group had time in the main area and children were observed playing ping pong and cards. This group also played in the "warehouse" on the large rock-climbing bouncy castle. Children wore inflatable suits and direct supervision was provided by the operator to ensure safety. The operator shared with licensing staff that with each piece of equipment children are explained and reminded of the operating procedures to keep everyone safe.

Child guidance was positive and educators were attentive when children spoke to them. The operator and educators work hard to develop a strong rapport with the children.
