General Comments

The operator was preparing for lunch when licensing staff arrived. The children sat at the kitchen table and one child sat in a highchair. The children ate independently with the youngest child getting support from the operator and additional servings were offered. Once children finished, they washed their hands to play, and the younger child was given a bottle by the operator in the playroom with children.

The play space was inviting with lights strung and resources accessible on shelves. Several large play items such as a kitchen and barbie house interested the children. The operator had children's artwork hung on the wall and evidence of documentation posted. The operator was encouraged to consider adding children's names within the environment to support name recognition and belonging. The operator was observed allowing children to engage in risky play as they lined up play chairs and walked across them.

All the children went to the washroom to use the washroom and have diaper changes, if needed after some play and in preparation for one child's naptime. A table with puzzles is located near the washroom so children waiting can sit and play showing the operator's care for children's transitions.
