General Comments

Both preschool and school aged children were having snack when I arrived for today's monitoring inspection.

Educator informed me that for the school age children, it was "bring a boardgame from home" day and they had just finished up playing a game of charades before snack.

When both rooms finished snack, educators ensured that everyone had a chance to use the washroom, then got ready to head outside. Preschool educators were observed to be encouraging and praising the children to get ready on their own, but ensured they stayed close to help when someone asked for help. Preschool educators were observed encouraging children to use their words when they needed help/wanted something.

While outside, the school aged children were observed playing soccer with one of their educators, some were playing on the dome, some were hanging out at the picnic tables, while others were observed playing a sort of "follow the leader" game with another one of their educators. Preschool children were observed playing on the play structure, the mud kitchen, and chasing each other around.

All educators were observed to be moving around different parts of the outside play space to ensure they could properly supervise the children.

At lunch time all educators were observed to be sitting at the table with the children and conversing with them.

All preschool children are provided with cots during quiet time, but those who do not sleep are permitted to play with toys on the carpets near their cots. Educators were observed taking the time and playing with the children who were not sleeping during nap time.
