General Comments I arrived for the licensing inspection and the children were playing in the nearby park. Their educators brought out balls and toys to supplement their playground time. I observed that educators were actively engaged with the children, joining in their ball games and play. They gave children reminders of their snack and water as well as gentle redirections and prompts of rules like washing their hands after returning indoors. Educators actively scanned, chose good sight points to see the whole play space, and did headcounts throughout the time in the park. They worked well together and were quick to notice children start to wander away from the group and redirected them. They had more staff than required for ratio which enabled children freer choice of when to return indoors to play there. The administrator said they made this decision after consulting with the after-school children last year about what they would like to see happen; they expressed they wanted more ability to freely choose between activities so the centre has enabled that. The children had space to display their art work and other learning in their rooms. They had ample art supplies, toys, games, and books available to them in their classrooms. The older after-schoolers have access to Chromebooks which they can use for educational videos and games for two half-hours per week. Pending their annual fire and health inspections I recommend this license for renewal.
