General Comments

I was signed in upon my arrival at the center. The children had their lunch and then were getting ready for nap or quiet time. The children who did not nap had a choice of many different quiet activities and I saw them playing with play doh, beading, puzzle games, and blocks. Some children were coloring and others wanted to practice cutting with scissors.

Today I looked at programming and documentation. The educators are planning using webbing. There are many interesting ideas in their plans, and they are child-led. The planning looks very good. I observed planning as far back as almost 2 years. Please ensure that all educators have current programming written down as well.

I saw documentation of children's learning in the form of learning stories. The learning stories I observed today were nicely done. They were well written, they were eye catching with pictures, and they tied the activities back to the curriculum to demonstrate learning. I suggest putting some of these up on the wall to display.

There were children's work displayed on the walls in the center. This is good, and I also suggest to put up some of the child's own creations to display rather than coloring sheets. It is important for children to see what they have created.

I checked administrative records and everything appeared to be kept up to date. Fire drills are being completed monthly, and the outdoor playground and first aid kit checklists are also being done monthly. I also looked at the postings and all necessary postings are there except for the renewal inspection report. Please display this as well.

The program appeared to go well at the time of my visit.
