General Comments
When I arrived the children returned in from outside. The children enjoyed free play time indoors. There were ample art supplies, toys, and books to supplement their playtime, readily accessible at the children's level. The operator redirected challenging moments of conflict by comforting the upset child, speaking to all children in a level tone, and getting down on their level to speak with them. When one child lost a toy brought from home in the play space the operator encouraged the children to support each other in solving the problem. She encouraged them to listen to each others' suggestions. Together figured out how to make the toy make noise and helped each other search the play space until they found the toy, sharing the accomplishment of solving the problem without having the operator step in to solve it for them. After lunch the children time playing outside. I observed the outdoor play space was well maintained. The children enjoyed time in the sandbox and there were hula hoops, balls, and many other activities and toys available to them as well as a garden they help the operator with.
