General Comments

It was almost lunch time when I arrived for the monitoring visit. Two children were napping, one child just arrived from preschool, and one was playing with some toys. A video monitor assists in the supervision of the sleeping children. The operator made a well-rounded lunch for the children and after the children ate, they had free play. I saw craft materials on the counter and the educator explained that the school age children are going to make snow globes when they arrive from school. The indoor area appears clean and there are a variety of materials for the children to play with.

During my last visit, I had verified staff and child records, and today I looked at administrative records. Outdoor maintenance checklists, first aid checklists, and fire drills are up to date and are being completed regularly. The operator's paperwork is organized. The operator showed positive child guidance techniques today such as gentle reminders, offering choices and active listening. She listens to the children's suggestions about what to do, demonstrating a child-led approach which is in line with the NB curriculum. She is patient and kind with the children. There were no issues during my visit.
