General Comments

When I arrived, the children were in the middle of having snack. Once snack was completed the children went into the other room where a large invitation was set up on the table. Some of the objects in the container were lentils, split peas, wooden bowls, scoops and tweezers to name a few items.

During the visit I observed numerous activities from mark making, reading stories, singing, dancing and matching games.

The operator creates conversation and develops language skills by asking many open-ended questions to the children and reviewing the activities of the day. For example, during lunch the operator asked the children "what did we do this morning".

The operator is constantly engaged with the children and sits at their level during activities.
