General Comments

Licensing staff arrived at the licensed facility to conduct the yearly license renewal inspection.

When licensing staff arrived at the facility, the school-aged children were offsite at the Barkers Point School playground playing; however, shortly thereafter the children returned to the facility.

While licensing staff observed the children playing, children were engaged in gross motor play in the gym while other the children were colouring in the main classroom.

One of the educators showed licensing staff a binder full of learning stories, webbing and pictures of indoor and outdoor play activities. The same educator relayed to licensing staff that invitations of play are set up for the children on a daily basis.

Child-to-staff ratios were more than what is required according to the Early Childhood Services Act.

Licensing staff observed all educators engaged with the children and only observed positive child guidance used throughout the inspection visit.

After the children ate their lunch, the children engaged in centre play. One centre was a Lego centre. The second centre consisted of brown boxes, glue, tape and scissors, where the children created their own play materials. The third centre was a group game, called Suspend.
