General Comments

Licensing staff arrived at the licensed facility to conduct the yearly license renewal.

The child-to-staff ratio was in compliance according to the Early Childhood Services Act and all educators were observed engaging with the children at the child's level. Licensing staff only observed the educators use positive child guidance techniques; one technique observed was, encouraging the children to use their words when they were upset about something.

Licensing staff observed an abundance of evidence of learning in each preschool classroom posted on the walls.

Invitations of play were set up in most classrooms during the inspection visit. The two-year-old classroom children and educators were engaging in a group painting activity that the children were very interested in. The educators offered children a choice of two primary coloured paints for the children to paint each hand with and assisted the children when needed. Once the children painted each hand a different colour, they stamped each hand, one at time, on a large piece of white paper. The educator then asked the children to rub their two hands together and asked the children to stamp the paper again with the blended colours. While the children rubbed their hands together, the educators, in a playful manner, asked the children what the new colour was on their hands.

Licensing staff recommends the license for renewal.
