General Comments

When QAM arrived in the morning, all classrooms were utilizing their outdoor learning environments. Children were engaged in a variety of activities involving leaves. Some children were creating piles of leaves and jumping into them, while others were collecting leaves for art activities or bringing them indoors for use in tuff trays. Educators identified fall-themed activities and the use of natural materials as current interests among the children. Outdoor learning environments included forts, swings, tires, art materials, literacy resources, hammocks, blocks, and painting opportunities. QAM noted that some outdoor learning environments could be enhanced through the addition of more accessible learning materials, such as art and literacy resources.

QAM observed the indoor learning environments and found all rooms to be clean, organized, and well maintained. Learning invitations were available and included experiences related to letters, numbers, reading, and sensory exploration.

The parent information board was current, and child-to-staff ratios were posted accurately and in compliance with requirements. QAM reminded administration to ensure monthly fire drills are completed, documented, and signed as required.
