General Comments Room 5 The QAM observed children engaging in a sensory invitation involving sand, cars, and animals. Additional activities included reading books and building with blocks. Educators reported that the children's current interests include building and knocking structures down, connecting materials, and creating projects. Ongoing classroom projects focus on family, castles, and trains. Purposeful planning was documented on the walls. Room 6A The QAM observed a winter-themed sensory invitation and a purposeful planning invitation involving coloring and painting. The learning environment contained a wide range of materials, including blocks, magnet blocks, dramatic play resources, art supplies, and literacy materials. Documentation of learning and planning was displayed on the walls. Room 6B The QAM observed invitations involving coloring, block building, and car play. Educators shared that children are currently interested in playdough, building in the snow, and block play. Purposeful planning was evident through documentation on the walls, including webs related to winter and outdoor play. QA Monitor recommended adding a binder to environments with documentation of children's learning. This allows children and the licensing team to revisit children's interests and learning throughout the year. Attendance and child–staff ratios in all three rooms were accurate and up to date.
