General Comments
The Quality Assurance Monitor was on site to conduct a follow-up inspection. Child-to-staff ratios were maintained throughout the visit. During the inspection, the Quality Assurance Monitor observed children having their snack and preparing to go outside to play. During the follow-up inspection, a discussion took place between the administrator and the Quality Assurance Monitor regarding the transition of infants to the two-year-old room. While gathering ratios, the Quality Assurance Monitor noted that two children who had recently turned two years old were still in the infant room. The administrator explained that the children had turned two on Monday and confirmed that there was available space in the preschool group. However, due to a staff member being on vacation, the transition was planned for the following Monday. The Quality Assurance Monitor clarified that while it is understandable for children to remain in the infant room temporarily when no preschool spaces are available, the absence of a staff member is not a valid reason to

The Quality Assurance Monitor explained that while preschool-to-preschool transitions can be flexible, infants must be transitioned to the preschool group immediately upon turning two years old if space is available.
