General Comments
Upon licensing staff's arrival, the groups were either eating snack or preparing for snack. Educators supervised the children throughout snack and reminded them to wash their hands afterward. Educators then cleaned and prepared the tables for the next activity. The oldest preschool group was engaged in circle time. Educators led the children in an interactive song using pictures and participated in counting with the group. Following circle time, invitations to play, including colouring pages, were set up on the tables. In another group, an educator facilitated an art activity where children used straws and diluted paint to create designs by blowing through the straws. The infant group also participated in a painting activity while educators remained present and supervised their exploration of the materials. Another group participated in a "follow the line" activity. Children placed small beads along lines with different shapes and patterns, creating designs while exploring the materials. The groups then transitioned outdoors. Some groups went for a walk, while the infants used their designated outdoor play area. Educators accompanied and supervised the children throughout the outdoor activities. The groups then transitioned indoors and prepared for lunch and quiet time. Diapering and toileting routines were completed, and children were supported in transitioning to rest. Children who napped were settled for sleep, while children who did not nap participated in quiet-time activities. Evidence of curriculum implementation and documentation was present in each classroom. One example included a classroom displaying a large webbing related to the fall season. The webbing included vocabulary, upcoming holidays and important dates, colours, weather, and other topics to support the children's learning through play. Only positive child guidance practices were observed throughout the visit. Professional learning hours have been completed. Staff and children's files were reviewed and found to be in order. Fire drills and outdoor safety
